National Severe Weather Warning Service

Chief Forecasters Assessment
Heavy rain is expected to affect parts of Scotland, and still the far northeast of England at first, during Monday as a deep depression moves slowly northwards across the North Sea.

Whilst the far north and northwest of the Scottish mainland and Orkney are considered most likely to be affected by a prolonged period of heavy rain on Monday, there remains good deal of uncertainty concerning exactly where the heaviest and most persistent rain will occur, but between 40 and 60 mm could fall.

This very wet weather is also expected to be accompanied by very windy conditions over parts of northern, eastern and central Scotland, particularly during the Monday morning rush hour. Gusts to 50-60 mph inland and up to 70 mph in some more exposed regions are possible.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Alert of Rain

Valid from 00:05 on Mon, 11th Aug 2014 until 18:00 on Mon, 11th Aug 2014

Heavy rain spreading into Scotland and northeast England during Sunday will continue on Monday over many northern, central and eastern areas, especially during the morning. The rain is expected to become more showery in nature during the afternoon. The rain will also be accompanied by unseasonably strong winds for a time.

The public should be aware of the potential for localised flooding and disruption, particularly to travel given that the heavy rain will be accompanied by very windy conditions.
